PREFACE

IN this compilation the same general plan has been followed as in my Bibliography of Lowell. All that was then said about the difficulties and limitations of such work might be repeated here. No one who has had experience in bibliographical work will expect completeness or absence of errors. Added experience on the part of the compiler, it is hoped, has made this book more accurate and more nearly complete.

The aim has been to give a practically complete list of Emerson's writings, and, as far as may be, to set forth the various editions, translations, and other changes through which they have passed. The chronological order has been followed; and every magazine, review, pamphlet, and book publication known to the compiler has been listed. Care has been taken to give the exact contents of the title-page of each separate publication. It has not always been possible to do this, however, in the case of translations and minor English republications. The various editions, translations, reviews, and auction sales have been grouped together.

It has been thought best to group together the works edited by Emerson and those for which he wrote prefaces or introductions. This is the only exception to the chronological order of arrangement of his single works.

The single titles have been placed together in alphabetical order. The first printed form of each poem and essay is recorded, and the more important subsequent changes. No attempt has been made to follow each piece through the whole succession of its appearances. In this list the prose titles have been printed in roman, the poems in italic, and the titles of books in small capitals.

All the articles and books of a biographical nature have been grouped together alphabetically under the name of the author or the publication in which each appeared. This includes letters and reminiscences; and the list is of a rich and varied character.

A glance at this book will indicate that Emerson has been much more frequently translated than Lowell, perhaps more frequently than any other American author. The many foreign titles appearing throughout the book show only in part the translations published, and what has been said concerning Emerson in other countries. The equipment of our libraries has not permitted a complete enumeration of translations and critical notices.

The list of critical articles and books about Emerson shows very definitely how much attention has been attracted to him almost from the outset of his career. He has been praised and criticised, admired and misunderstood, as almost no other man of his time.

I wish here to acknowledge my great indebtedness in the compilation of both the Emerson and the Lowell Bibliographies to the Boston Public Library, the Boston Athenæum, and the Library of Harvard University. I am especially indebted to Miss Mary H. Wall [now Mrs. John Henry Gill] of the Boston Athenæum for valuable aid. Her lists of the works of Emerson and Lowell prepared for that library have greatly facilitated my labors. Other libraries of which I have made use are those in Concord, Mass.; and the Astor, Lenox, and Columbia University, in New York city. In New York the private collection of Mr. Stephen H. Wakeman was generously opened to furnish me aid.

I am also under great obligations to Mr. William T. Newton of Boston for the use of his Emerson collection, the most extensive and complete I have found anywhere. It includes rare editions and many books about Emerson, as well as magazine and review articles and newspaper cuttings. He made extensive preparations for an Emerson bibliography, the results of which he has placed without reserve at my service. His collection has been of invaluable aid to me.

Through the generosity of Dr. Samuel A. Jones, Ann Arbor, Mich., I have had placed at my disposal the extensive collections of notes made by him in preparation for an Emerson bibliography. These have enlarged my lists of book titles, magazine articles, and especially newspaper notices of Emerson's death and work.

My debt is also very considerable to Miss Harriet Brackett of Boston for aid in completing the lists of foreign magazine, review, and newspaper articles, and the translations into German, French, and other languages. Her expert experience in the Library of Columbia University has been at my service, and that part of the book owes much to her skill and patient attention to details. My debt to her is also large for persistent and adequate aid in all parts of the book.

Not least of the helps given me are those of my daughter, Miss Florence Cooke, whose aid in the exploration of libraries, and in the verification of references, has been invaluable.

Last, but not least, I have been placed under obligations by Mr. Edward Waldo Emerson for suggestions and additional items of interest, for reading the proof-sheets of the lists of titles, and for making helpful corrections. The same kind of generous service has been rendered by Mr. Patrick Kevin Foley, the well-known Boston bibliographer; and by Mr. George H. Sargent, bibliographer of the "Boston Evening Transcript."

In fact, therefore, the present compilation is the product of a large amount of coöperative effort. Such a work could be rendered fairly complete by no other process.

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF SINGLE TITLES

The titles of poems are given in italic, prose articles in roman, and book titles in small capitals. If the last entry under a title is not that of one of Emerson's books, it indicates that that essay or poem has not been included in his authorized works. When the titles of essays or poems have been changed, both are listed, that belonging to the volume indicated being inclosed in brackets.

Lowell [James Russell], To, on his fortieth birthday.

Century, November, 1893, v. 47, pp. 3-4.

With an introductory note by Prof. C. E. Norton, as follows:

"On the 22d of February, 1859, a dinner was given to Lowell by a few of his intimate friends, to celebrate his fortieth birthday. The following poem, hitherto unpublished, was read by Emerson. Its form is not perfect, but it bears the tower-stamp of genius, and it has a special interest in its illustration of the relations between the poets, and as a forecast of the power which Lowell should display, in the course of his swiftly following years, in his 'War Poems' and the 'Commemoration Ode.' It has another and even more intimate interest as an expression of Emerson's lack of confidence in his own poetic powers, and his recognition of their limitations, so that he laid his tribute before his friend with the feeling that the friendship must make up for any short weight in the offering. Emerson was already fifty-six years old, and wrote but little poetry in his later years. Few poems in the select 'Anthology of American Poetry' have such high personal associations as this. — Charles Eliot Norton."

CHRONOLOGICAL LIST OF SEPARATE WORKS AND EDITIONS

FAME

THE OFFERING, for 1829. Cambridge: Published by Hilliard and Brown, 1829.

24mo, pp. 252, cloth. The poem is printed on pp. 52-53.

[iii] Advertisement.

"This little book is an offering to the cause of infant education, to which the whole of its proceeds will be devoted. Its publication had not been thought of at the beginning of November last, and the printing was not commenced till near the close of the month. This fact, if it do not excuse, will serve to account for its imperfections."

This poem was the first work of Emerson's to appear in print. He did not reproduce it in any of his volumes, and it was quite forgotten until it appeared in "The Radical," in 1871. It was there introduced to the public by Thomas Wentworth Higginson, with these words:

"The following poem by Mr. Emerson is not published in any edition of his works, yet bears many of his characteristics, and is interesting as showing the early tendencies of his mind. It is taken from a little volume called 'The Offering,' which was prepared by the Cambridge divinity students in 1829, in aid, I believe, of the Infant School enterprise. Among the contributors were S. G. Bulfinch, Ephraim Peabody, J. B. Fox, and others. Mr. Emerson was then twenty-six years old, and had lately been ordained as colleague to Rev. Henry Ware, of the Second Unitarian Church in Boston."

CONCORD HYMN

ORIGINAL HYMN. [“By the rude bridge that arched the flood.”]

Single 24mo sheet, 1 page, ornamental border. N. p., n. d.

Several changes having been made in this hymn, it is here reprinted verbatim from the original, with punctuation and capitalization retained.

CONCORD HYMN, SUNG AT COMPLETION OF THE BATTLE MONUMENT, April 19, 1836

By the rude bridge that arched the flood,
Their flag to April's breeze unfurled,
Here, once, the embattled farmers stood,
And fired the shot heard round the world.

The foe, long since, in silence slept;
Alike, the conqueror silent sleeps;
And Time the ruined bridge has swept
Down the dark stream which seaward creeps.

On this green bank, by this soft stream,
We place with joy a votive stone,
That memory may their deed redeem,
When, like our sires, our sons are gone.

O Thou, who made those heroes dare
To die, or leave their children free, —
Bid Time and Nature gently spare
The shaft we raise to them and Thee.

NATURE

NATURE.

"Nature is but an image or imitation of wisdom, the last thing of the soul; nature being a thing which doth only do, but not know." PLOTINUS.

The Western Messenger, a monthly magazine of 64 pages, was published in Cincinnati from June, 1835, to January, 1836, with William Henry Channing and James H. Perkins as the editors. Then it was removed to Louisville, and James Freeman Clarke, minister of the Unitarian Church in that city, became the controlling editor, by whom it was continued until April, 1841. He was assisted in its editorial management by Ephraim Peabody, Christopher P. Cranch, and William G. Eliot; and among the other Unitarian ministers who contributed to it were Samuel Osgood, Charles T. Brooks, and John S. Dwight. Other contributors were Margaret Fuller, Jones Very, Amos Bronson Alcott, and William D. Gallagher. It was, therefore, a literary journal, as well as a church magazine. See the biographies of Perkins, Channing, and Clarke for more detailed information. See also the biography of Harm Jan Huidekoper, by Nina Moore Tiffany and Francis Tiffany, privately printed at the Riverside Press, 1904.

[v] Preface by the English Editor.

To the great reading public entering Mr. Fraser's and other shops in quest of daily provender, it may be as well to state, on the very threshold, that this little Reprint of an American Book of Essays is in no wise the thing for them; that not the great reading public, but only the small thinking public, and perhaps only a portion of these, have any question to ask concerning it. No Editor or Reprinter can expect such a Book ever to become popular here. . . .

The name of Ralph Waldo Emerson is not entirely new in England: distinguished Travellers bring us tidings of such a man; fractions of his writings have found their way into the hands of the curious here; fitful hints that there is, in New England, some spiritual Notability called Emerson, glide through Reviews and Magazines. Whether these hints were true or not true, readers are now to judge for themselves a little better. . . .

But, on the whole, our Book is short; the Preface should not grow too long. Closing these questionable parables and intimations, let me in plain English recommend this little Book as the Book of an original veridical man, worthy the acquaintance of those who delight in such; and so: Welcome to whom it may concern! T. CARLYLE.

Fraser having died before this edition was exhausted, some of the copies have the name of Nickisson, his successor, on the back of the cover.

NOTICE

Here is a new volume of Essays by Emerson; concerning which I am to certify, that this English edition of them seems to be correctly printed; that the English Publisher is one appointed by the Author himself, and is made under contract with him as to the pecuniary results. To Emerson readers in England I am to certify so much; leaving the influence from it to their own honorable and friendly thought. To unauthorized reprinters, and adventurous spirits inclined to do a little in the pirate line, it may be proper to recall the known fact, which should be very present to us all without recalling, that theft in any sort is abhorrent to the mind of man; — that theft is theft, under whatever meridian of longitude, in whatever “nation,” foreign or domestic, the man stolen from may live; and whether there be any treadmill and gallows for the thief, or no apparatus of that kind! . . .

More on this paltry department of the business, I had not to say; and to touch on any other department of it was not in my commission at present. I will wish the brave Emerson a fair welcome among us again; and leave him to speak to his old friends, and to make new.

T. CARLYLE.

This edition was set from manuscript furnished by the author. There are many slight variations, owing to the fact that the author did not revise the proofs. This may be properly regarded as the first edition, since it was the first to reach the public. "Once having set out to print, I obeyed the solicitations of John Chapman to send him the book in manuscript for the better securing of copyright. In printing them here I have corrected the most unpardonable negligences, which negligences must be all stereotyped under his fair London covers and gilt paper to the eyes of any curious London reader; from which recollection I strive to turn away." — Carlyle-Emerson Correspondence, v. ii, pp. 119-120.

THE SAME. Second edition. London, George Routledge, 1850.

This was the remainder of the Chapman ed. of 1847, bought by Routledge, cut down to 16mo, and issued with gilt edges.

THE POEMS OF RALPH WALDO EMERSON. With Prefatory Notice by Walter Lewin. London, Walter Scott, 1886.

Small 24mo, pp. xxvi, 270, cloth.

The Canterbury Poets.

This edition gives dates and places of the first appearance of the poems, with numerous notes. "Readers familiar with previous editions of Mr. Emerson's Poetical Works will find in the present an entirely different arrangement. The time has arrived when these poems must be looked at, not only on their merits as poetical work, but in their relation to the life of the author. On this account it seemed best to place them in chronological order, and to the limited extent that this was possible, it has been done."

WAR

ÆSTHETIC PAPERS. Edited by Elizabeth P. Peabody.

“Beautie is not as fond men misdeeme,
 An outward show of things that only seeme.

 Vouchsafe, then, O Thou most Almighty Spright!
 From whom all gifts of wit and knowledge flow,
 To shed into my breast some sparkling light
 Of thine Eternall Truth, that I may show
 Some little beames to mortall eyes below
 Of that immortal Beautie, there with Thee,
 Which in my weake distraughted mynd I see.”

ADVERTISEMENT

[Between title-page and Contents, but not paged.]

. . . The particular occasion which has given such sudden birth to the present volume is told in a few words. I had made arrangements, some six months since, with the American proprietor of Mr. Emerson's new work, to publish it here simultaneously with its appearance in America — not with any view to assume a copyright in this country, which long before the recent decision I felt to be a mere fallacy — but simply to acquire first possession of the market. The revised sheets reached me in due course; but a few days before the whole came to hand, the work had already been published here, and though, as I learn, without the final corrections of the author, and at five times the price of the present volume, the circumstance was by no means satisfactory. Besides this, other editions were announced as in preparation. My intention to publish the work having been advertised to the trade as early as October last, long before any other announcement had appeared, I could not reconcile myself to be beaten out of my intention by competition — hence a new Library, as cheap and elegant as anything yet produced. . . .

OBITUARY NOTICE OF THOREAU

HENRY D. THOREAU.

In Boston Daily Advertiser, May 8, 1862.

HENRY D. THOREAU

Died at Concord, on Tuesday, 6 May, Henry D. Thoreau.
aged 44 years.

The premature death of Mr. Thoreau is a bitter disappointment to many friends who had set no limit to their confidence in his power and future performance. He is known to the public as the author of two remarkable books, "A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers," published in 1849, and "Walden, or Life in the Woods," published in 1854. These books have never had a wide circulation, but are well known to the best readers, and have exerted a powerful influence on an important class of earnest and contemporary persons.

Mr. Thoreau was born in Concord, in 1817; was graduated at Harvard University in 1837. Resisting the example of his companions and the advice of friends, he declined entering either of the learned professions, and for a long time pursued his studies as his genius led him, without apparent method. But being a good mathematician and with an early and controlling love of nature, he afterwards came by imperceptible steps into active employment as a land-surveyor, — whose art he had first learned in the satisfaction of his private questions, — a profession which gave him lucrative work, and not too much of it, and, in running of town lines and the boundaries of farms and woodlands, carried him precisely where he wished to go, — to the homes of new plants, and of swamp and forest birds, as well as to wild landscape, and Indian relics. A man of simple tastes, hardy habits, and of preternatural powers of observation, he became a patient and successful student of nature in every aspect, and obtained an acquaintance with the history of the river on whose banks he lived, and with the habits of plants and animals, which made him known and valued by naturalists. He gathered a private museum of natural curiosities, and has left a large collection of manuscript records of his varied experiments and observations, which are of much more than scientific value. His latest studies were in forest trees, the succession of forest growths, and the annual increment of wood. He knew the literature of natural history, from Aristotle and Pliny, down to the English writers on his favorite departments.

But his study as a naturalist, which went on increasing, and had no vacations, was less remarkable than the power of his mind and the strength of his character. He was a man of stoic temperament, highly intellectual, of a perfect probity, full of practical skill, an expert woodsman and boatman, acquainted with the use of tools, a good planter and cultivator, when he saw fit to plant, but without any taste for luxury, without the least ambition to be rich, or to be popular, and almost without sympathy in any of the common motives of men around him. He led the life of a philosopher, subordinating all other pursuits and so-called duties to his pursuit of knowledge and to his own estimate of duty. He was a man of firm mind, and direct dealing, never disconcerted, and not to be bent by any inducement from his own course. He had a penetrating insight into men with whom he conversed, and was not to be deceived or used by any party, and did not conceal his disgust at any duplicity. As he was incapable of any the least dishonesty or untruth, he had nothing to hide, and kept his haughty independence to the end. And when we now look back at the solitude of his erect and spotless person, we lament that he did not live long enough for all men to know him. E.

BOSTON HYMN

BOSTON HYMN. This poem was first printed in Dwight's Journal of Music, January 24, 1863. It was written at the solicitation of Dwight, in whose Journal it appeared with the title "The Prologue," and with the following editorial preface: "The forthcoming number of the Atlantic Monthly has the following strong and rugged verses, in which all who were fortunate enough to be present at the Jubilee Concert in the Music Hall, on the New Year's Day, will recognize the prologue read on the occasion by Ralph Waldo Emerson."

See John Sullivan Dwight, Brook-Farmer, Editor, and Critic of Music: A Biography, by George Willis Cooke, Boston, 1898, pp. 189-192, for an account of this concert, together with two letters of Emerson to Dwight in regard to the writing of the poem.

THE LOVER'S PETITION

THE LOVER'S PETITION. OVER-SONGS. [Poems written specially for the Occasion of the Wedding of Henry Morton Lovering and Isabel Francelia Morse.] Taunton. Privately Printed, 1864, by A. M. Ide, Jr., as a wedding gift to his friend, Mrs. Lovering.

4to, half morocco.

Only 5 copies were printed. Thick paper, with printing in purple, and ornamented border in red. Printed on only one side of each leaf. One copy was presented to the bride, and one to each of the contributing authors. Emerson contributed "The Lover's Petition;" Bayard Taylor, "Epithalamium;" George W. Curtis, "Bridal Song;" Lucy Larcom, "Invocation."

This poem appeared in May-day and Other Pieces, 1867, but has not been reprinted since.

NEW ENGLAND SOCIETY ORATION

NEW ENGLAND SOCIETY ORATION.

IN THE NEW ENGLAND SOCIETY ORATIONS. Addresses, Sermons, and Poems delivered before the New England Society in the City of New York, 1820-1885. Collected and edited by Cephas Brainerd and Eveline Warner Brainerd. Published for the Society. Volume II. New York, The Century Co., MCM1.

Oration, 1870, pp. 373-393.

Response to toasts, pp. 394-396.

"This oration was not printed at the time, and the report of it then published by the Tribune was very imperfect. Only a part of the original manuscript remains; from this corrections have been made, but the latter two-thirds could not be thus corrected. Fortunately, a great part of this matter, but in a different arrangement, is found in the paper entitled 'Boston,' in vol. xii (Natural History of Intellect) of Emerson's Complete Works, Riverside Edition."

This Oration was delivered at Steinway Hall, New York, December 23, 1870. It was reported in the Daily Tribune of December 24, 1870, under the title, "The Pilgrim Fathers."

The Response was printed in the report of the Sixty-fifth Anniversary of the New England Society in the City of New York at Delmonico's, December 22, 1870.

12mo, pp. [vii]-80, cloth.

[vii] Note to Supplement.

The hope that some of the letters missing from it when this Correspondence was first published might come to light, has been fulfilled by the recovery of thirteen letters of Carlyle, and of four of Emerson. Besides these, the rough drafts of one or two of Emerson's letters, of which the copies sent have gone astray, have been found. Comparatively few gaps in the Correspondence remain to be filled.

These newly found letters have been inserted in their proper places in an enlarged edition of the Correspondence, but are here printed together for the benefit of owners of the early edition. The dates of the letters show their places in the Correspondence.

Emerson's letter of 1 May, 1859, of which only fragments were printed in the early edition, is now printed complete; and the extract from his Diary accompanying it appears in the form in which it seems to have been sent to Carlyle.

[v] Note.

Of the pieces included in this volume, namely, those from the Dial, "Character," "Plutarch," and the biographical sketches of Dr. Ripley, of Mr. Hoar, and of Henry Thoreau, were printed by Mr. Emerson before I took any part in the management of his papers. The rest, except the sketch of Miss Mary Emerson, I got ready for his use in readings to his friends or to a limited public. He had given up the regular practice of lecturing, but would sometimes, upon special request, read a paper that had been prepared for him from his manuscripts, in the manner described in the preface to "Letters and Social Aims," — some former lecture serving as a nucleus for the new. Some of these papers he afterwards allowed to be printed; others, namely, "Aristocracy," "Education," "The Man of Letters," "The Scholar," "Historic Notes of Life and Letters in New England," "Mary Moody Emerson," are now published for the first time.

[v] Note.

The first five pieces in this volume, and the Editorial Address from the Massachusetts Quarterly Review, were published by Mr. Emerson, long ago. The speeches at the John Brown, the Walter Scott, and the Free Religious Association meetings were published at the time, no doubt with his consent, but without any active coöperation on his part. The "Fortune of the Republic" appeared separately in 1879; the rest have never been published. In none was any change from the original form made by me, except in the "Fortune of the Republic," which was made up from several lectures for the occasion upon which it was read.

[v]-vii. Preface.

The year after Mr. Emerson's death, Mr. Cabot, in editing his works, gathered into a volume the occasional writings which had never been included in previous editions, although six of them had been printed, either as pamphlets or in periodicals, long before, by the author. These were the Sermon on The Lord's Supper, the Historical Address at Concord in 1835, that at the dedication of the Soldiers' Monument there in 1867, and that on Emancipation in the British West Indies, the Essay on War, and the Editors' Address in the Massachusetts Quarterly Review. "American Civilization" had been a portion of the article of that name in the Atlantic in 1862. "The Fortune of the Republic" also had been printed as a pamphlet in 1874.
Mr. Cabot said in his prefatory note, "In none was any change from the original form made by me, except in the 'Fortune of the Republic,' which was made up of several lectures, for the occasion upon which it was read." This was after Mr. Emerson was no longer able to arrange his work and his friends had to come to his aid.

The speeches at the John Brown, the Walter Scott, and the Free Religious Association meetings had been printed, probably with Mr. Emerson's consent. The other pieces included by Mr. Cabot, namely, the speeches on Theodore Parker, the Emancipation Proclamation, Abraham Lincoln, at the Harvard Commemoration, "Woman," the addresses to Kossuth, and at the Burns Festival, had not been published.

All that were in Mr. Cabot's collection will be found here, although the order has been slightly changed. To these I have added Mr. Emerson's letter to President Van Buren in 1838, his speech on the Fugitive Slave Law in Concord soon after its enactment, that on Shakespeare to the Saturday Club, and his remarks at the Humboldt Centennial, and at the dinner to the Chinese Embassy; also the addresses at the consecration of Sleepy Hollow Cemetery and at the opening of the Concord Free Public Library. The oration before the New England Society of New York in 1870, printed by them in their recent volume, is not included, as most of the matter may be found in the "Historical Discourse at Concord" and in the essay "Boston," in "Natural History of Intellect."

I have given to the chapters mottoes, the most of them drawn from Mr. Emerson's writings.

EDWARD W. EMERSON.

NATURAL HISTORY OF INTELLECT AND OTHER PAPERS. By Ralph Waldo Emerson. With a General Index to Emerson's Collected Works. [Vignette of pine-bough.] Boston and New York, Houghton, Mifflin and Company, The Riverside Press, Cambridge, 1893 [October].

12mo, pp. iv, 353, cloth.

Large paper edition, November, 1893; 18mo edition, October, 1893.

[iii] Prefatory Note.

The first two pieces in this volume are lectures from the "University Courses" on philosophy, given at Harvard College in 1870 and 1871, by persons not members of the Faculty. "The Natural History of the Intellect" was the subject which Emerson chose. He had, from his early youth, cherished the project of a new method in metaphysics, proceeding by observation of the mental facts, without attempting an analysis and coördination of them which must, from the nature of the case, be premature. With this view, he had, at intervals from 1848 to 1866, announced courses on the "Natural History of Intellect," "The Natural Method of Mental Philosophy," and "Philosophy for the People." He would, he said, give anecdotes of the spirit, a calendar of mental moods, without any pretence of system.

None of these attempts, however, disclosed any novelty of method, or indeed, after the opening statement of his intention, any marked difference from his ordinary lectures. He had always been writing anecdotes of the spirit, and those which he wrote under this heading were used by him in subsequently published essays so largely that I find very little for present publication. The lecture which gives its name to the volume was the first of the earliest course, and it seems to me to include all that distinctly belongs to the particular subject.

The lecture on "Memory" is from the same course; that on "Boston" from the course on "Life and Literature," in 1861. The other pieces are reprints from the North American Review and the Dial. . . .

[v] Preface.

In this volume, in addition to the papers which it contained in the Riverside Edition, five of Mr. Emerson's lectures appear in print for the first time. They are "Instinct and Inspiration," "The Celebration of Intellect," "Country Life," "Concord Walks," and "Art and Criticism." Some account of the origin, or the circumstances attending the delivery of these lectures, will be found in the Notes. The first of them belonged to the course on "Natural History of Intellect" and now follows the lecture which bears that name in the Riverside Edition, but is here called "Powers and Laws of Thought." These two, with "Memory," are grouped under the general name of that course. Important passages from another lecture, and from other versions of the first here given, are introduced into the Notes to it.

The General Index, which first appeared in the Riverside Edition, has been enlarged and improved by Miss Laura Woolsey Lord, to whom and to many friends who have given valuable help in tracing quotations to their sources, and for information used in the Notes, my thanks are due. . . .

EDWARD WALDO EMERSON.

BOWDOIN PRIZE DISSERTATIONS

TWO UNPUBLISHED ESSAYS. The Character of Socrates. The Present State of Ethical Philosophy. By Ralph Waldo Emerson. With an Introduction by Edward Everett Hale. Boston and New York, Lamson, Wolfe & Co., 1896.
 16mo, pp. viii, 81, cloth.
 Reissued in London, in May, 1896.

These essays were offered in competition for the Bowdoin prize when Emerson was an undergraduate at Harvard College. Cabot says of them, in his Memoir: "He took two Bowdoin prizes for dissertations, one on the Character of Socrates and one on the Present State of Ethical Philosophy. He also received a Boylston prize for declamation, thirty dollars, which he carried home hoping that it would buy a shawl or some other needed comfort for his mother, but was chagrined to learn that it had gone to pay the baker's bill."

LETTERS TO A FRIEND

LETTERS FROM RALPH WALDO EMERSON TO A FRIEND, 1838-1853. Edited by Charles Eliot Norton. Boston and New York, Houghton, Mifflin and Company, The Riverside Press, Cambridge [August], 1899.

12mo, pp. 81, cloth. Portrait.

Introduction, pp. 3-7.

"The friend to whom the letters in this little volume were addressed was younger than Emerson by nine years. At the beginning of their friendship he had lately returned from Europe, where he had spent a year and a half under fortunate conditions. Europe was then far more distant from New England than it is to-day, and more was to be gained from a visit to it. The youth had brought back from the Old World much of which Emerson, with his lively interest in all things of the intellect, was curious and eager to learn. His own genius was never more active or vigorous, and his young friend's enthusiasm was roused by the spirit of Emerson's teaching as expressed in the famous Phi Beta Kappa discourse in 1837, the lectures on Culture, delivered in Boston in the winter of 1838, and the address before the Cambridge Divinity School in July of the same year."

These letters were written to Samuel Gray Ward, a Harvard graduate of 1836, a contributor to The Dial, who published a small volume of translations from Goethe under the title of "Essays on Art." He gave much attention to the study of art, and shared his inquiries with Emerson. In his "Ode to Beauty" Emerson mentions his debt to Ward. "For many years Mr. Ward occupied the responsible position of American Agent of Messrs. Baring Brothers and Company — a position which during the Civil War was one of national importance."

WORKS EDITED BY EMERSON OR TO WHICH HE CONTRIBUTED INTRO- DUCTIONS

SARTOR RESARTUS. In Three Books. Boston,
James Munroe and Company, MDCCCXXXVI.
12mo, pp. viii, 299, cloth.

[iii]-v. Preface of the American Editors.

The Editors have been induced, by the expressed desire of many persons, to collect the following sheets out of the ephemeral pamphlets [Fraser's (London) Magazine, 1833-34] in which they first appeared, under the conviction that they contain in themselves the assurance of a longer date.

The Editors have no expectation that this little work will have a sudden and general popularity. They will not undertake, as there is no need, to justify the gay costume in which the Author delights to dress his thoughts, or the German idioms with which he has sportively sprinkled his pages. It is his humor to advance the gravest speculations upon the gravest topics in a quaint and burlesque style. If his masquerade offend any of his audience, to that degree they will not hear what he has to say, it may chance to draw others to listen to his wisdom; and what work of imagination can hope to please all? But we will venture to remark that the distaste excited by these peculiarities, in readers, is greatest at first, and is soon forgotten; and that the foreign dress and aspect of the work are quite superficial, and cover a genuine Saxon heart. We believe no book has been published for many years, written in a more sincere style of idiomatic English, or which discovers an equal mastery over all the riches of the language. The Author makes ample amends for the occasional eccentricity of his genius, not only by frequent bursts of pure splendor, but by the wit and sense which never fail him.

But what will chiefly commend the book to the discerning reader is the manifest design of the work, which is, a Criticism upon the Spirit of the Age, — we had almost said, of the hour, in which we live; exhibiting, in the most just and novel light, the present aspects of Religion, Politics, Literature, Arts, and Social Life. Under all his gaiety, the writer has an earnest meaning, and discovers an insight into the manifold wants and tendencies of human nature, which is very rare among our popular authors. The philanthropy and the purity of moral sentiment, which inspire the work, will find their way to the heart of every lover of virtue.

PAST AND PRESENT. By Thomas Carlyle. Ernst ist das Leben. — Schiller. Boston, C. Little, and James Brown, MDCCCXLIII.

[iii] American Editor's Notice.

This book is printed from a private copy, partly in manuscript, sent by the author to his friends in this country, and is published for his benefit. I hope this notice that the profits of the sale of this edition are secured to Mr. Carlyle, will persuade every well-disposed publisher to respect his property in his own book.

CRITICAL AND MISCELLANEOUS ESSAYS. By Thomas Carlyle. Volume I. Boston, James Munroe and Company, 1838.

12mo, cloth.

Four volumes, edited by Emerson.

[iii] Advertisement.

The author of the papers now collected for the first time, prepared, last winter, at the request of a gentleman in this country, a list of his miscellaneous writings arranged in the order of time in which they first appeared in various literary journals. That list has been exactly followed in the present work, excepting that one additional article, known to be his, has been inserted, which, it is presumed, the author omitted accidentally. Of these papers, the present volumes comprise the first half. Two more volumes will hereafter be published, which will absorb the remainder. Then add, the Translation of "Wilhelm Meister" (3 vols., 12mo, London, 1824); the "Life of Schiller" (1 vol., 8vo, London, 1825); "German Romance" (4 vols., 12mo, London, 1827); "Sartor Resartus" (1 vol., 12mo, Boston, 1835); and the "History of the French Revolution" (3 vols., 8vo, London, 1837); and the Catalogue of his works will be complete up to the present time.

The interest with which the publication of this work has been demanded, makes the Editor sure of its welcome. Mr. Carlyle's recent works have made him known as a writer to numbers to whom the essays in these volumes will be new. But many readers will here find pages which, in the scattered anonymous sheets of the British magazines, spoke to their youthful mind with an emphasis that hindered them from sleep. It is a fact worth remembering in our literary history, that his rich and cheerful genius found its earliest audience in or near New England, from young men who had complained with the first Quaker, that, in the multitude of teachers, "none spake to their condition." Such will be glad to trace in this collection the spiritual history of the author, the course of his reading, the depth of his studies, and what outward materials went to the edification of the man.

Mr. Carlyle has repeatedly expressed, in letters to the editor and other friends, his satisfaction in the good reception his literary labors have found in this country, and the love and hope with which he regards the progress of thought and culture on this side the Atlantic.

The following is the original prospectus issued to secure subscribers to this work. 8vo, single sheet, printed on one side:

PROSPECTUS ¹

The subscriber has been induced by the repeated request of many individuals, added to the interest with which Mr. Carlyle's recent History has been received, to collect his Miscellaneous Writings.

These papers are widely scattered in journals and magazines from the year 1829 to the present time; and the most of them in journals not reprinted in this country. It is thought that a large proportion of these miscellanies would be more acceptable to the general reader than either of his works that have been already printed here. I propose to print the series of his critical and miscellaneous articles in chronological order, according to a list furnished by the author himself. At present, only two volumes will be published, with the intention, however, of completing the series, at a future time, in one or two volumes more. The profits of the sale will be transmitted to the author. As the publishers, James Munroe & Co., relinquish to him all profit on such copies as are subscribed for, I ask of his friends to send so many names as they can procure of purchasers of the work, to James Munroe & Co., 134 Washington Street, Boston, or to me.

[iii] Editor's Notice.

It may interest the reader of this book to know that nearly all these letters have been printed directly from the original autographs furnished by the persons to whom they were addressed. A few have been carefully copied, but without alteration, from the worn and torn originals. In some letters, passages have been omitted on account of private or personal references. Otherwise, the letters have been printed as they stood, with very few verbal corrections. R. W. E.

Preface by Emerson, pp. v-viii.

The editor of this volume, who has urged the author to permit its publication, and charged himself with its care, has submitted a part of it to my inspection, and requested me to insert in the book my impressions. It is proper to own, that the author has not been consulted, or even informed of this interference, which it is not certain that he will pardon. But the editor affirms his own rectitude. . . .

Perhaps we may even thank the poet, who, in his verse, does not regard the public. It is written to himself, — is his forest or street experience; the record of his moods, fancies, observations, and studies, and will interest good readers as such. He confides in his own bias for meditation and writing. He will write, as he has ever written, — whether he has readers or not. But his poems have to me, and to others an exceptional value for this reason, — we have not been considered in their composition, but either defied or forgotten, and therefore consult them securely for photographs.

[v] Prefatory Note.

This volume contains nearly all the pieces included in the Poems and May-Day of former editions. In 1876, Mr. Emerson edited a selection from his Poems, adding six new ones, and omitting many. Of those omitted, several are now restored, in accordance with the expressed wishes of many readers and lovers of them. Also, some pieces never before published are here given in an Appendix; on various grounds. Some of them appear to have had Mr. Emerson's approval, but to have been withheld because they were unfinished. These it seemed best not to suppress, now that they can never receive their completion. Others, mostly of an early date, remained unpublished doubtless because of their personal and private nature. Some of these seem to have an autobiographic interest sufficient to justify their publication. Others again, often mere fragments, have been admitted as characteristic or as expressing in poetic form thoughts found in the Essays.

In coming to a decision in these cases it seemed on the whole preferable to take the risk of including too much rather than the opposite, and to leave the task of further winnowing to the hands of Time.

As was stated in the preface to the first volume of this edition of Mr. Emerson's writings, the readings adopted by him in the Selected Poems have not always been followed here, but in some cases preference has been given to corrections made by him when he was in fuller strength than at the time of the last revision.

A change in the arrangement of the stanzas of "May-Day," in the part representative of the march of Spring, received his sanction as bringing them more nearly in accordance with the events of Nature.

Preface.

It has seemed fitting in the one hundredth year since the birth of Emerson to prepare a new edition of his writings in prose and verse. . . .

I undertook the annotation of the works at the desire of the publishers, sharing their feeling that to the student of Emerson sidelights on the man, his surroundings, his work, and method might be welcome, gathered from his journals, the correspondence, reminiscences, and works written about him. In supplying the notes I have had to rely on my own judgment. The pressure due to the late undertaking of the work has prevented my revising and condensing them. Remembering that notes seem to many readers an interruption and even an impertinence, they have been placed at the end of each volume. . . .

Vol. IX, pp. xi, 531. Portrait. Poems. [May, 1904.]

Preface.

. . . After much hesitation the editor has gathered in their order of time, and printed at the end of the book, some twenty early pieces, a few of them taken from the Appendix of the last edition and others never printed before. They are for the most part journals in verse covering the period of his school-keeping, study for the ministry and exercise of that office, his sickness, bereavement, travel abroad and return to the new life. This sad period of probation is illuminated by the episode of his first love. Not for their poetical merit, except in flashes, but for the light they throw on the growth of his thought and character, are they included.

With regard to the notes: the editor has annotated the poems where possible from the journals and essays, has given various readings where it seemed worth while, and their dates when he knew them, with such circumstances and facts as he thought might be interesting. He has in a few instances given from the note-book the original rhapsody in which Mr. Emerson strove to render on the moment, as best he might, the message which he heard from the woodland Muse. . . .

vi. Preface.

. . . All that were in Mr. Cabot's collection [1884] will be found here, although the order has been slightly changed. To these I have added Mr. Emerson's letter to President Van Buren in 1838, his speech on the Fugitive Slave Law in Concord soon after its enactment, that on Shakespeare to the Saturday Club, and his remarks at the Humboldt Centennial, and at the dinner to the Chinese Embassy; also the addresses at the consecration of Sleepy Hollow Cemetery and at the opening of the Concord Free Public Library. The Oration before the New England Society of New York in 1870, printed by them in their recent volume, is not included, as most of the matter may be found in the "Historical Discourse at Concord" and in the essay "Boston," in "Natural History of Intellect." . . .

Vol. XII, pp. vi, 612. Natural History of Intellect, and Other Papers. [November, 1904.]

[v] Preface.

In this volume, in addition to the papers in the Riverside Edition, five of Mr. Emerson's lectures appear in print for the first time. They are "Instinct and Inspiration," "The Celebration of the Intellect," "Country Life," "Concord Walks," and "Art and Criticism." Some account of the origin, or the circumstances attending the delivery of these lectures, will be found in the Notes. The first of them belonged to the course on Natural History of Intellect and now follows the lecture which bears that name in the Riverside Edition, but is here called "Powers and Laws of Thought." These two, with "Memory," are grouped under the general name of that course. Important passages from another lecture and from other versions of the first here given, are introduced into the Notes to it. . . .

EDWARD WALDO EMERSON.

General Index

The Concord Edition, 1904, was printed from the same plates as the Centenary Edition, with additional illustrations, mostly photogravures.

The Autograph Edition, 1905, consisted of six hundred sets of the Concord Edition, in each of which was inserted a page of Emerson's original manuscript.

The Centenary Edition was issued in London by Archibald Constable and Company, 1904, from sheets furnished by The Riverside Press.

12mo, cloth, 12 volumes.

NOTE.

In the spring of 1871 I was a member of a party of twelve, including Mr. Ralph Waldo Emerson, who went by railroad from Boston to California, and travelled there for several weeks. This little book presents some notes of that journey. I kept no diary; but in writing to a member of my family who was a cousin of Mr. Emerson, I was led to speak of him often. What follows was prepared afterwards to be read to a club; and now, for one reason and another, I have come to think it well to print it.

PHILLIPS, GEORGE SEARLE ["January Searle"].

Emerson: His Life and Writings. By January Searle.
London, Holyoake & Co., 147 Fleet Street, 1855. 12mo,
pp. 48, paper. — CONTENTS: Emerson, his Life and Writings, pp. [3]-40. Emerson Banquet at Manchester, pp.
[41]-48.

This was the first book about Emerson, and was a slight affair.

George Searle Phillips, better known to his contemporaries as "January Searle" (a nom de guerre indicating the month in which he was born), was born at Peterborough, England, January 31, 1816. He was educated at a school kept by his mother's cousin in Cambridge, and early took to journalism and general literary work. His "Tracts for Manhood," a series of pamphlets intended as a set-off on the liberal-thinking side to the "Oxford Tracts," are forgotten; better known are his books on English nature and country life, — "Leaves from Sherwood Forest," "Pel Verjuice, the Wanderer," "The Country Sketch Book," "The Gypsies of Dane's Dyke: A Story of Hedgeside Life in England in 1855." His love of the forest and the beauties of the countryside was the result of early contact with nature, strengthened in mature years by the reading of Wordsworth, whose "Memoirs" (prized by many Wordsworthians) he published in 1852. The writer who appealed to him the most was undoubtedly Emerson, whom he often met when he came to the United States in 1857. He also became intimate with Garrison, Parker, Whipple, Holmes, Longfellow, and others, and attained a high position as a writer of books and magazine articles. His career had a sad ending.
"Domestic troubles had their effect on his sensitive nature," and on May 1, 1873, he became an inmate of an insane asylum in New Jersey. He died at Morristown, N. J., February 7, 1889. — New York Times, January 2, 1904.

SOCIAL CIRCLE IN CONCORD.

The Centenary of the Birth of Ralph Waldo Emerson as observed in Concord, May 25, 1903, under the Direction of the Social Circle in Concord [Rhodora].

Rhodora! If the sages ask thee why
This charm is wasted on the earth and sky,
Tell them, dear, that if eyes were made for seeing,
Then Beauty is its own excuse for being.

A cheery Oracle, alert and quick

Amidst the joyless voices of the hour —

The dirges dull of singers who are sick,

The peevish complaints of thinkers who are sour —

Its utterance was still of hope and health;

Its silence lessens the world's better wealth.

Puck, May 3, 1882, v. 11, p. 132.

This was indeed life's fulness, to behold

A world that mocked thee in that earlier time —

A world that spurned the offerings of thy prime —

With bowed head listening to thy words of gold.

All that the boyish prophecy foretold

In mystic phrases and in rugged rhyme

Was come to pass; the height thou'dst dared to climb

Was conquered, and the doubting folk of old

Pressed hard behind thee to the hills new-won —

To catch the shimmer of a far-off sea,

The glimpses of strange lands undreamt before,

The glory of a new arisen sun.

To raise fond hands of gratitude to thee —

Victor and leader, life could hold no more!

He was our Socrates — nay, he was more,
Our bee-lipped Plato, such a potent spell
Was in his wingèd or his written lore.
The freshness of our land was on his brow,
For when he stood in England with his peers,
They said: This man is modern, and of now.
Yet among us he rather seemed antique;
For when we met him in the street, we thought
There's one of Plutarch's men! There goes a Greek!
